7.15 p.m. Coconut Revolution (50mins)

The modern-day story of a native peoples' seemingly impossible victory over Western Colonial power. An island rose up in arms against giant mining corporation Rio Tinto Zinc - and won! The newly formed Bougainville Revolutionary Army (BRA) began the fight with bows and arrows and sticks and stones. Against a heavily armed adversary they still managed to retain control of most of their island. How were BRA troops able to drive around the island without any source of petrol or diesel and create new electricity networks with apparently no equipment? Watch this David and Goliath story of the 21st century to find out.

Break for discussion and refreshments.

8.45. p.m. Pacific Women exploring nonviolence (25 mins)

"With nonviolence you get more" states an activist in this film which shows women from Bougainville, Fiji, Papua New Guinea, the Solomon Islands and Timor-Leste meeting to exchange experiences and deepen their skills in nonviolent conflict resolution. All are survivors of violent conflict and all are convinced that a sustainable peace can only be built by nonviolent action. The women in the film talk about their experiences, how they have managed to survive, their actions for peace, and their ideas about justice and nonviolence. A film to provide much food for thought and discussion!
